PRESS RELEASE

NEW BOOK Søren Kierkegaard's famous and beloved Diapsalmata'er in a new edition

Now, for the first time, there is a thoroughly commented and illustrated edition of Søren Kierkegaard's (1813-1855) famous and beloved Diapsalmata from the first volume of the main work, the double work Enten-Eller (1843).

Diapsalmata'er is the collection of short texts that begin the first volume of Either-Or. It is a collection of texts with different content - lyrical, short essays and narrative.

It contains, among other things, famous texts such as: "In vain do you, like an old prostitute, make up your furrowed face", "I do not bother at all", "When I get up in the morning, I immediately go to bed again", "What is a poet? An unhappy person who hides deep anguish in his heart "and" You should be enigmatic not only to others but also to yourself ".

The text of the book has been textually changed to modern Danish by mag. nature. Jens Staubrand, who has also selected the images and written the detailed information that the captions contain. It is the publisher's hope that this modern, thoroughly edited collection of diapsalmata will interest the contemporary reader, just as it is our hope that the book's pictures and their often full texts give the reader a deeper and richer reading experience than if one had only the naked text.
