PRESS RELEASE

NEW BOOK. Psychological masterpieces on existential despair

A new thoroughly edited, illustrated and commented edition of Søren Kierkegaard's psychological masterpiece "The disease to death" is now published in modern Danish.

It is about despair - about existential despair - which he equates with the Christian concept of sin.

The book is a "profound-hearted" analysis of the forms of despair and sin. And Kierkegaard distinguishes between three forms or levels of despair, that is, of despair or hopelessness, namely: Desperate over not wanting to be himself, or lower: Desperate not wanting to be one, or very low: Desperate wanting to be another than himself, to wish for a new self. The desperate human being is desperate because he is trying to live like someone else. For Søren Kierkegaard, faith is the way out of despair.

The book is thoroughly edited by mag.art. Jens Staubrand, who has also selected the book's pictures and written the texts for them. It is the publisher's hope that this modern, thoroughly edited edition will appeal to the contemporary reader, and that the pictures with their (often full) texts will give the reader a richer reading experience than if you only had the naked text.
